Eb. Physicren:- Allow one your numerous readers to say a word on the stringency of money. The actual cause of Lank failures (of which we are only at the beginning) it is obvious to any observing mind that the trouble originates in the want of circulating money. Ever since silver became a commolity the drainage of that metal for exportation has become enormously larger than the supply, and every-day the former is increasing while the latter is diminishing: To remedy this evil let there be a free and leaving a surplus for exportation by the opening of many mines now shut down on account of the low price of silver. Before the demonstisation of silver its exportation to China, Japan and the Pacific Islands was very insignificant, wheareas now it amounts to millions of dollars yearly, and at the same time gold is going to Europe at a learful rate.
